“Barnstorming Book Tour” Coming Your Way...

Nearly a century ago, Orville and Wilbur Wright pushed aside their few simple tools in the sands of Kitty Hawk, crawled onto a biplane, and flew. Since that December day, air travel has made life increasingly complex—and stressful. Ask any businessperson. One of them, Anne Hopkins, found a way to turn flying into a source of joy and peace and has written Sticks & Wires & Cloth, about escaping into the skies of a bygone era in a 1929-design biplane.

This August and September, Anne will fly around the United States again as she and biplane Nanna do nearly every summer. This time, though, an onboard webcam will take cyber-travelers with her.

The “Barnstorming Book Tour” will land in small towns to introduce local journalists to the magic that blows on the wind between two wings. Suggestions for airport stops are now being accepted.

Author: Anne Hopkins is an information technology executive turned author, an expert in unwinding from The Corporate Wars.
